ARE YOU RECONCILED TO YOUR DAILY TASK?

In the October Woman's Home Companion Anne Bryan McCall, writing a "Tower Room Talk," entitled "Daily Bread," has the following to say about the common place:

"I used to have it said to me: by a gloomy person I once knew: 'Oh, my dear, wait until you are older and disillusioned a bit! I'm afraid it is going to be a dreadful shock to you, Anne, my dear, when you some day to come down to real things and adjust yourself to commonplace, everyday life."

"There were times when I believed her; when I looked forward with dread to the loss of the world of youth and romance which at that time I found so altogether delightful. Then, in time, the days of romance and dreams did, as she prophesied, pass by. I mean that from a life singularly rich in dreams and romance, I was obliged to 'come down,' as we say, to realities. It was daily life that I had to meet, with all its very real needs; and to make it the more real I had to earn my daily bread. It was hard enough at first, and being young and not a very wise person, I mourned a good deal over the change. I took things pretty hard and yearned for the old days of dreams and romance when life had seemed to me so rich and wonderful. But by and by, little by little, I began to understand, I began to see the wonder of the daily and the commonplace, I began to realize that life does not, indeed, grow less wonderful, but more wonderful, as we get closer to it."

TO REMEDY WAREHOUSE LAW.

Austin, Texas, Oct. 2.—To remedy what is claimed to be a flaw in the recently enacted emergency cotton warehouse law, W. W. This is 75 per cent of the value of the cotton, but it has not been stated whether this is based on eight cent or 10 cent cotton. It was said the law did not provide how much anti-insurance company might lend.
